Yaroslavl 2011: Addressing social diversity in modern democracies

Posted: 05 Sep 2011 02:26 PM PDT

September 7 marks the opening of the 2011 Yaroslavl Global Policy Forum, bringing together government officials, business representatives, scientists and journalists from more than 40 countries for two days of discussion. It is lauded as an opportunity for world leaders to contemplate solutions to major challenges facing the global community, such as international security and efficient policy-making in the global economy.

With the turn of a key: the modernization of Russian real estate

Posted: 07 Sep 2011 08:24 AM PDT

Most expat professionals that were around Moscow in the early '90s will recall the Russian real estate market being in an 'embryonic' stage of development, typified by corporate tenants and investors eagerly searching out higher quality product and finding very little. But like all emerging markets, Moscow's property market endured this stage of growth and in due course, the higher-end markets filled out.
